Sekulow: We intend to show overwhelming evidence that the President did nothing wrong Jan. 25, 2020 - 30:02 - President Trump's personal attorney Jay Sekulow says the administration continually reviews effectiveness of all foreign aid.

Sekulow:

Now we can ignore this.

Now we can make believe this did not happen, but it did.

This is basically what you call a straw man argument, let me be clear.

Kept pushing this false dichotomy

And I am going to point to those in a few minutes.

I am doing this to put this

Here is what they did not play.

Here is what they did not tell you.

And I am going to quote from ... on page ...

And contrary to what ...

Those were the words of ...

This case is not about ...

That they can read every body's thought

Relied heavily on selected clips ...

I am not going to replay those 7 times. He said it, you saw it, that is the evidence.

As if ... were created after the fact ... showed you

Burden sharing was raised in the transcript

This also is wrong

In their testimony ... raised his concerns about in the May 23, 2019 ...

It is also important to note

The administration did not want to take a business as usual approach to foreign assistance, a feeling that once a country has received a certain assistance package it is something that continues forever. They didn't talk about that in the 23 hour presentation

Long standing concerns and specific concerns

The house managers ignore the testimony before their committees

16 minute mark.
